Planning for the Woodford Community Learning Center 1/28

Woodford School is scheduled to be demolished and rebuilt.

Plans for the new school include a "community learning center." And just what that will mean and be is the project at hand.

The Woodford Local School Decision Making Committee (LSDMC) has been meeting with interested KH residents to dream and plan about possible "partners" for the learning center. The goal is to design a center that will serve not only the students but KH residents of all ages and interests.

The meetings are open to all residents. Whether you're simply curious, deeply interested, or intrigued by the challenge of helping mold the center-to-be, this is your chance to be in at the beginning.

> Next meeting...1/28...7:00 pm Woodford School Library

KHCC Roots...Part I

Jim Cebula has been KHCC's unofficial resident (Davenant) historian for many years, and he's become more official with the publication of Creating a Multi-Racial Neighborhood in Post World War II Cincinnati At the risk of eyestrain & trivializing an important work, we've extracted a few morsels.

1914: KH was the last independent village annexed to Cincinnati

1950: 3% of KH's 4.800 residents were African American; ten years later the percentage had increased to 18%. The new residents were primarily middle class, buying single family homes. By 1970 the neighborhood was 52% African American, and 75% in 1980.

At the end of the 1950's, housing-related incidents roused community activism in KH, integrating its growing black population into established white neighborhoods.

1959: A home bombing on Standish avenue (apparently related to a dispute between numbers racketeers) led to the formation of an interracial civic association to "keep people in the rackets from moving into our community."

Alarmed by the increase in large apartment buildings, residents successfully petitioned City Hall to rezone some 80 vacant lots to permit only single family homes.

Jim Cebula is a professor of history at Raymond Walters.

By 1961 real estate agents were using "block busting" tactics to scare white owners into selling to the agents cheap who then re-sold the houses at inflated prices to African American buyers moving outward from the city. "One African American resident, having recently moved to a home on Tyne Ave., recalled that it seemed like all the houses in the immediate area were for sale. Each time a house was sold, the one next door was listed.

KHCC was founded in by black and white activists to combat block busting and organized around the concept of community building through interracial cooperation. They "went door to door and listened to homeowners, "convened living room meetings...stressing the value of raising their children in an integrated neighborhood."

The new KHCC's real estate & housing committees "identified Realtors who employed scare tactics" and asked the state to revoke their real estate licenses.

In 1965 the Cincinnati mayor refused to publicly support the new fair housing law, and opponents tried to pass a referendum to repeal the law. KHCC campaigned against the referendum.

KHCC in its early years actively marketed KH locally and nationally "to attract residents committed to the ideal of integration."

Winterfest Rocked!

Over 500 folks celebrated Winterfest 2007 on the lawn of the Kennedy Heights Arts Center and the Pleasant Ridge Community Center...& Ol' Man Winter did his bit, with cold and snow arriving just in time.

The Community Center was filled with Crafts, Music, Games, Santa Himself and all sorts of activity after the Tree Lighting at 6 pm at the Center, Melissa Smith, who retires this year after 15 years of directing the Center, had organized a fantastic array of music, arts, crafts, vendors and food for the Community.

The horse-drawn sleighs (wheeled) ferried celebrants between the Community Center and the KH Arts Center and ballet tech.

Music was provided by the Cornerstone Missionary Baptist Choir in the Community Tent, the Nutcracker at ballet tech, jazz and dancing by CODE, our local 60's band.

Thanks to Eric Bertlesen and his crew for another great Winterfest.
